The Integrated Review: Experiences of Practice

Working with children for children

Guide

Overview:

The Integrated Review: Experiences of Practice is a series of standalone documents for practitioners and service leads, sharing experiences of the implementation of the integrated health and early education review for young children aged two to two-and-a-half.

Research:

NCB carried out research in the London Borough of Islington and in Warwickshire in summer 2015. Both authorities had taken part in early pilots of the integrated review. During the research, participants were asked a number of questions about their own experiences of the integrated review and how it is being carried out in their local area. Participants included the leaders and managers of health and early years services, practitioners and parents.

This series of documents is mostly based on the findings of that research, with the intention of illustrating the different ways in which local areas are implementing the review and the experiences of the individuals involved. Where relevant, examples are also drawn from the NCB and ICF GSK implementation study of the integrated review in the five pilot areas (2014).
